Tom Wolf, Governor

Pedro A. Rivera, Secretary of Education

In order to maintain our position of leadership in the global marketplace, it is essential to maintain a supply of new talent in the areas of science, technology, engineering and mathematics (STEM). It is understandably difficult in terms of budget, scheduling and heterogeneous talents among student bodies, for local schools to deliver the front line in STEM-related experiences to students with particular interest and aptitude in these fields. The Pennsylvania Governor's School for the Sciences (PGSS) meets this need by providing an intensive program of study and research in the natural and physical sciences, mathematics and computer science, which combines classroom instruction with hands-on, inquiry-based research, using the sophisticated technology and facilities available at Carnegie Mellon University.

WHO MAY APPLY

Academically talented high school students who are current juniors at the time of the application deadline may apply to the Pennsylvania Governor's School for the Sciences. Applicants are expected to demonstrate academic achievement, sustained interest in the sciences and mathematics, and a record of pursuing this interest in activities beyond the classroom.

THE SELECTION PROCESS

The application consists of four parts. The applicant must complete the Personal Data Form, attaching an extracurricular resume and two essays. Two teachers – a science teacher and a mathematics teacher – each must complete a reference form. The applicant's guidance counselor must complete a recommendation form, attaching the transcript and current grades, attendance record and, if available, test scores and class standing. (Homeschoolers should contact the PGSS Office for instructions on who may complete the forms.)

PGSS receives hundreds of applications from students with excellent academic records, evidence of sustained interest and outstanding performance in science and mathematics and high standardized test scores. The competition is very intense. A selection committee consisting of faculty and staff from PGSS, Carnegie Mellon University, and state educators convenes to read the applications. All parts of the application are taken into account, with emphasis placed on the student's written expression and ideas conveyed through the essays, as well as the transcript. The teacher and counselor forms are read for evidence of the student's daily work habits, attitudes, curiosity, independence and reliability. From the pool of qualified applicants at least one will be chosen from each of the 29 Intermediate Units. Class size depends on funding.

COSTS AND COMMITMENT

The PGSS Scholarship covers tuition, room, board, instructional materials and program activities for all participants. Families are responsible for transportation to and from the program, pocket money, a residential life deposit that is refunded if all conditions are met, and for damages not covered by the deposit. Students must remain in residence for the full 35-day program, including weekends. They must arrive promptly for all classes and activities. There is some unscheduled time nearly every day for personal use, but the Governor's School cannot provide special facilities or alter schedules for formal athletic training, intensive music study or other commitments unrelated to the program.

Academic Program

Core Courses

To keep apace of the rapid changes in professional scientific inquiry, PGSS courses may change from year to year. The courses and research opportunities listed below provide a general picture of the experiences students can expect. Students are required to take all five Core Courses during the first two weeks, after which they may drop one, provided they are carrying at least one elective course. The following are examples of recent Core Courses:

- Biotechnology of Viruses, examining how biotechnology is used in the development of treatments for viral infections, the molecular interactions between different drugs and their targets, and the spread of infections diseases.
- Organic Chemistry, treating the methods of preparation, reactions and uses of some of the important functioning classes of organic compounds.
- Concepts of Modern Physics, including special and general relativity, basics of particle physics and the particle physics/cosmology interface.
- Discrete Mathematics, looking at mathematics in a new way, using elementary combinatorics, graph theory, probability and game theory.
- Computer Science, using a mathematical approach to data organization, text compression and cryptography.

Guest Lectures

The program will include a series of guest lectures, presented by experts in STEM-related fields. The particular focus of these lectures may vary from year to year.

Laboratory Research and Team Projects

- Students select one laboratory course from biology, chemistry, physics or computer science. It is often recommended, but not necessarily required, that the laboratory course be in the same subject area as the team project.
- Students select one team project from a variety of topics, which will be proposed by the faculty in biology, chemistry, computer science, mathematics of physics. The project is a collaborative research experience which culminates in a formal scientific report which is published in the annual PGSS journal as well as an oral presentation to the entire program community and guests.

Electives

PGSS will offer approximately five elective courses, which the student may choose, depending upon his/her particular interests. Each student may take up to three elective courses. However, students are strongly encouraged to strike a balance between academic and social activities. Carrying more than three electives, in addition to the required curriculum, is considered to be an academic overload and requires special permission from the program director. Elective offerings will vary from year to year, depending upon the latest interests of the faculty. The following are some of the topics which have been offered in recent years:

- Laser Technology
- Intelligent Transportation Systems
- Mathematics Problem Seminar
- Anxiety, Depression and the Brain
- Origin of Mathematical Ideas
- Foundations of Music: Science and Mathematics
- Topics in Material Science

Faculty and Facilities

Carnegie Mellon University is renowned for its award-winning faculty and science research facilities. It is the recipient of many research grants and contracts that have permitted the acquisition of cutting edge technology. Pittsburgh is also the home of the Allegheny Observatory, the Carnegie Science Center, the Pittsburgh Supercomputing Center and the Carnegie Museums of Art and Natural History. All of these have hosted PGSS visits.

PGSS faculty are recruited mostly from Carnegie Mellon University, but also include educational leaders from other institutions. Guest lectures have been given by experts from science institutes in the Pittsburgh region and the nation.

Carnegie Mellon University is an urban campus. Students reside in supervised, gender-separate dormitories. There is a planned program of recreational activities.
